Social Justice through Education

- The goal of the multicultural education movement:
  - Help address stereotypes and inaccuracies of Native communities
7 Standards of the Center for Research on Education’s Diversity & Excellence

- Teachers and students work together
- Language and literacy are developed across the curriculum
- Lessons connect to students’ lives and current experiences
- Challenging lessons engage students
- Small group conversations emphasize dialogue
- Teaching style: Demonstration
- Learning style: Observation
- Students are empowered to make decisions

Place-Based Literacy

- Native education should be place-based, focusing on the current community and location
- However, current education approaches emphasize the global, distributed community:
  - Students are socialized to simulate current academics
  - Student communication is focused at the global level, rather than at the local level
  - This approach makes the white, middle-class population the expected norm

Native Knowledge 360

- Uses STEM standards to deepen understanding in other subject areas
- Embeds traditional knowledge in all subject areas

Culturally Responsive Skills

- Value Native language and culture
- Cultivate Native teachers as nation builders
- Safety Zone Theory allows students to critically look for areas of cultural value

3 Themes to Support Urban Native Partnerships

- Teachers who experience these 3 themes with Native communities can open the doors to honest evaluations and improvements in overall education:
  - Experiences with Native people
  - Professional development
  - Community
